Dear Madam or Sir:

I had first-hand experience of the collateral damage of rodenticides when, a few years ago, my dogs ingested rodenticide a neighbor was using. Fortunately, they made it - after both considerable stress as well as nontrivial monetary expense.

We must take steps to limit the extent of rodenticide use, in particularly with the much more dangerous second-generation agents. They poison not just the target species but also non-target wildlife and domestic animals. Please take steps to cancel the general-use registration of second-generation rodenticides!

Sincerely,
Michael Mavrovouniotis
